

CONTRIBUTORS

THOMAS S. BLANTON directs the National Security Archive at George Washington University's Gelman Library.

FRANK G. BURKE spent his career at the National Archives, predominantly as the executive director of the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, and for three years as the acting archivist of the United States.

DIETER DOWE is the director of the Historisches Forschungszentrum at the Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung in Bonn and a member of the board of directors of the Bundeskanzler-Willy-Brandt-Stiftung and of the Stiftung Reichspräsident-Friedrich-Ebert-Gedenkstätte.

ASTRID M. ECKERT is Assistant Professor of Modern European History at Emory University in Atlanta and a former research fellow at the German Historical Institute, Washington, D. C. (2002–2005).

DAVID GREENBERG teaches journalism and media studies at Rutgers University. He is a frequent contributor to the The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Atlantic Monthly, and Foreign Affairs and is an editor and columnist at Slate.

THOMAS HERTFELDER is the executive director of the Stiftung Bundespräsident-Theodor-Heuss-Haus in Stuttgart and teaches theory of history at the University of Stuttgart.

WALTER MÜHLHAUSEN is the deputy executive director of the Stiftung Reichspräsident-Friedrich-Ebert-Gedenkstätte in Heidelberg.

JOHN POWERS is an archivist with the Nixon Presidential Materials Project at the National Archives in College Park, Maryland.

MARTIN SABROW is the executive director of the Zentrum für Zeithistorische Forschung in Potsdam (ZZF) and Professor of Contemporary History at University of Potsdam.

ANDREAS VON SEGGERN is a fellow for education and exhibitions at the Otto-von-Bismarck-Stiftung in Friedrichsruh.

BARRY SCHWARTZ is Professor Emeritus of Sociology at the University of Georgia in Athens.

HARTMUT WEBER is the president of the Federal Archives of Germany (Bundesarchiv).