LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

THOMAS ADAM is an associate professor of history at the University of Texas at Arlington, where he has hosted the Young Scholars’ Forum biannually in cooperation with the GHI since 2005. His teaching and research interests include German-American encounters, philanthropy and urban culture, and the financing of higher education in comparative perspective. His most recent publication is Buying Respectability: Philanthropy and Urban Society in Transnational Perspective, 1840s to 1930s (2009).

UWE LUEBKEN was a research fellow at the German Historical Institute, Washington, DC, from 2004 to 2008. He has taught American history at the University of Cologne and postwar German and European history at the Cologne School of Journalism. Currently, he is an environmental history fellow at the Amerika-Institut of the Ludwig-Maximilians-University in Munich and finishing a book on the history of flooding in the Ohio River Valley.

AMANDA BOWIE MONIZ is a Cassius Marcellus Clay Postdoctoral Fellow at Yale University. She received her PhD in history from the University of Michigan in 2008. Her current book project, tentatively entitled “The Empire of Humanity: Atlantic World Philanthropy, 1740–1815,” studies the search for ways to aid people formerly outside one’s arena of moral responsibility.

ELY JANIS is a visiting lecturer at Gonzaga University. His current research examines the links between Irish-American, African-American, and Afro-Caribbean nationalism in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

NICOLE PHELPS is an assistant professor of history at the University of Vermont, where she specializes in international, diplomatic, and transnational history. Her 2008 dissertation, “Sovereignty, Citizenship, and the New Liberal Order: US-Habsburg Relations and the Transformation of International Politics, 1880–1924,” won the University of Minnesota’s Best Dissertation Prize in the Arts and Humanities.

KATHARINA RIETZLER is a PhD candidate in history at University College London. Her dissertation deals with the role of American philanthropic foundations in the development of International Relations as a discipline in the interwar years.

BIRTE TIMM is a PhD candidate at the Free University of Berlin and currently holds a Friedrich Ebert Foundation scholarship. Her dissertation focuses on the decolonization movement in Jamaica, the influence of migration on this process, and the reciprocal influence of the civil rights movement of African Americans in the U.S.
CHRISTINA OPPEL is a PhD candidate in American Studies and a research and teaching assistant at the University of Münster, Germany. In her dissertation, “Harnessing Germany: African Americans, Nazi Germany and Human Rights,” she investigates the functions of African-American discourse on National Socialist Germany (1933–2008) within the context of the African-American human rights struggle.

KATJA NAUMANN is a research fellow at the Centre for History and Culture of East Central Europe Leipzig (GWZO) and lecturer at the Global and European Studies Institute at the University of Leipzig. Her dissertation project deals with transformations in history teaching at prominent U.S. universities between 1900 and 1970.
